Maybe.

The Examiner in a page article says that the mystery of the death of Henry Planz has been cleared up by the finding of the following letter:

"My Dear—Your note, received to-day, has cut me to the quick. If you knew the trouble that I am in I think even you would have spared me this last blow. Thank God! I will be free from all of you to-night. All I ask of you now is to bury my secret in your heart. It is for you and you alone. But if any one is ever finally convicted of murdering me tell what you know and show this letter. But until then never. Again I implore you to seal your lips: the last request I shall ever make of any human being. Keep out of the way until the excitement is over. And now good-bye forever, and may God love you, my girl, better than He has me.

HENRY PLANZ.

The chances are that the letter is manufactured.

CLOSE OF THE FAIR.

CHICAGO TURNS LOOSE IN THE MIDWAY.

The White City About to Vanish Forever.

Chicago, Nov. 1.

TO THE APPEAL:—Last evening closed the Columbian Exposition exercises and the big World's Fair will soon be but a memory. To those who visited it it will be a memory to last a life time. The youngest child who visited it will when it becomes a grand parent look back on this the grandest exhibition the world has ever witnessed and quote it as a never to be forgotten episode.

But as a matter of fact no one has ever really seen the Fair. I doubt if a single person in the world has really seen half of it. The world had been ransacked for treasures of art, invention and manufacture and billions of dollars worth of the best and costliest of the world's products had been gathered in one place. The six months allotted for the fair was too short a time for any one person to see half of these exhibits.

Think of one building twenty acres in extent with a mile track on the top; well when you had spent a month in the building you were only just beginning to see the Fair.

How they are going to clear the buildings of their contents, clear the grounds of the buildings and deliver the grounds again to the Park Commissioners is what is puzzling the people.

I understand that an offer has been made of a million and a quarter to take down the buildings, but no one wants the contract at those figures.

They are talking now of burning the buildings and charging admission to the grounds when the great conflagration is going on. They could fire one building every night and give a series of great shows.

On account of the death of Mayor Harrison the Fair closed with no demonstration and the flags at half mast. But on the Midway it was different and all barriers were broken down.

Men and women alike seemed unmindful of decorum; bedlam was let loose and riot ran unlicensed from one end of the thoroughfare to the other. It was a mad carnival. Regiments of men were formed and marched up and down the plaisance, every man tooting a tin horn or shouting.

Women grouped, tooted horns, and did high kicking to the delight of the spectators. Men and women mixed swept everything before them. They took people off their feet and tramped over them unconcernedly. Protestations were met with laughter and were drowned in the blast of horns. Squads of revelers ran over the plaisance, surrounding groups of people sedately viewing the sights and circling around them, danced, shouted and deafened them with the noise of horns, horse rattles and the beating of improvised gongs and cymbals. Rolling chairs were appropriated and rushed along on the gallop. Wheelbarrows were secured from somewhere, and half a dozen women were wheeled around in the crowds by their escorts. A portly woman trotted along, tagged on each side by boys in knee pants. She blew a tin horn lustily, and the infants kept their mamma company with two baby's crying balloons.

As the night grew the fun became more furious. Signs were torn down and used as banners. Awnings were ripped from rafters and formed into robes, with which men and women draped themselves. The red, white, and blue paper that decorated the buildings were torn down and women made bows and scarfs of their plunder. The horns were blown frantically all the time. The men shouted and the women screamed. From end to end of Midway the tumult was the wildest ever known there. The shows closed early, as the crowd afforded in its saturnalia a greater sight than any housed freak on the street. All the shows closed but the Oriental dancing academies. The Nautch girls became imbued with the abandon of American women and men, threw aside a lot of their clothes, and came out in front of the theater to lure patrons in by their contortions. The girls danced as they never have before, and the crowd cheered and chanted Chinese refrains and beat on tin pans and coffee coolers taken from some looted refreshment stand.

The Columbian guards received caution to let the crowd have its fling and not to interfere with the amusements, however boisterous it became, unless life became endangered. At last, about 11 o'clock, the riot alarm was sounded from the Chinese theater. The crowd had begun a raid on the theatre. The great gong was pulled down and set going. Idols and grim figures were pulled from their pedestals and carried about amid shouts and a grand fanfare of tin trumpets. Then the guards interfered and the fight came on. Guard Spencer ordered the rioters to disperse. They drowned his words with toots of their horns and shouts and then took him off his feet. Recovering as the crowd good-naturedly left him without further molestation, he whistled an alarm and fifty or more guards rushed out of the station next the Ferris wheel and pitched into the crowd. Soon they began bringing prisoners into the station. The patrol wagons were called and twenty men were promiscuously seized out of the crowd were driven over to Woodlawn station. This ended the riotous phase of the affair, but hurrahing and noise were kept up until the Guards forcibly cleared the street.

In the midst of this an alarm of fire was sounded and the patrol wagons plowed a lane through the crowd.

The Bedouin camp had been set on fire just at dark. Had the attempt been successful the whole Midway would have been burned, and the crowd seemed in a humor to do anything.

The fair has been a big financial success. The total receipts being $21,258,836. It will be ten years at least before another great World's Fair is attempted. The world will have to take a rest before it can attempt another Exposition.

Then I suppose we will look back on the Chicago affair as something quite small and insignificant.

A bachelor farmer near Conlee City, Douglas county, Wash., hired a stout Swede woman to dig his potatoes, giving her one-fourth. The woman's digging powers staggered her employer, she making a clean record of 1600 pounds a day. This was too much for the farmer. A woman earning 400 pounds of potatoes in one day was more than his nervous system could stand, so he called the deal off.
